Kohl Idea: Army Unit With Paris

 Integrated Force
 Would Be a Test Of Cooperation

Reuten

BONN - Chancellor Helmut Kohl urged Friday the formation of a joint French-West German fighting unit, linking old enemies in a unique integrated force to strengthen the European pillar of the North Atlantic alliance.

We want to progress with military-political cooperation," he said at a news conference. "I foresee a joint, fully integrated military unit, such as an army brigade."

The notion of French soldiers marching alongside Germans, their enemies in three major wars in the last 120 years, has gamed ground in recent years as Bonn and Paris forged increasingly close ties within the European Community.

It has been given impetus by fears among West German conser-vatives that West German and European interests may be subjugated to the U.S. desire for arms agreements with the Soviet Union and the need to redraw defense strategy in the age of nuclear arms control.

Mr. Kohl said there was "nothing which dictates against the idea" members of the congressional com-of the joint unit, and nothing in the mittees jointly investigating the charter of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to prevent it.

an experiment to determine how the concept of closely integrated armed forces could be developed, and he noted that Paris and Bonn already had plans for joint training of general staff officers.

This does not run counter to close ties with the United States," Mr. Kohl said. "The U.S. is extremely interested is seeing us in Europe work more closely together on defense,"

"The Atlantic partnership is fun-damental to the security of the Fed-eral Republic," he added, "It must be increased by strengthened Euro-pean cooperation in security."

Wait'll You See Summer

By Thomas Netter Special to the Herald Tribune GENEVA — It was the eve of summer, and business should have been booming Friday at Le Glacier du Mont Blanc, a strall cefé acd inc more strad small café and ice cream stand on the lakeside promenade along the port in central Geneva. Instead, the red folding chairs were leaning, empty and wet, against the white tables, whose tops were splattered with dirty puddles of rain.

"It's bad and getting worse," said the proprietor, as she looked up in vain toward the leaden, rainy sky frowning over the lake. "Business is absolutely nothing these days, and it's the same all along here. If it keeps up fike this, I'll have nothing to do."

It rained Friday in Geneva, and the day before, and the day before, and the day before that. It's rained nearly every day so far this month, and it's raining in the English Midlands, and it's been raining nearly every day in northern France, and in fact nearly everywhere from London to Warsaw, according to the London Weather Center. But things could be worse just before the start of summer on Sunday: In the Swiss, French-and Italian alps, it snowed Thursday night, closing some alpine passes. "Yes, summer does begin Monday, but temperature and weatherwise, we don't see any change," said Wolfgang Raatz of the West German Weather Service in Essen. "It's going to be cold and wet," he said, "not very pleas-

SEOUL - Prime Minister Lee Han Key warned South Koreans by television Friday night that the government would have to make an "extraordinary decision" if order was not restored soon in the streets. Hours after the speech, the state radio reported that a policeman was killed in Tacjon, south of Seoul, when anti-government dem-onstrators commandeered a bus and drove into the ranks of riot policemen. It was the first fatality reported in the street protests that erupted June 10.

Mr. Lee said the government would continue for now to try "dia-logue and compromise" in an effort to end the rioting, which continued Friday in at least eight South Korean cities

Earlier in the day, the U.S. ambassador, James Lilley, called on President Chun Doo Hwan to deliver a letter from President Ronald Reagan that reportedly urges moderation in dealing with the crisis.

Details of Mr. Lilley's conversation with Mr. Chun at the presidential office were not available, but the envoy was assumed to have underscored the U.S. position that a crackdown would be disastrous. Mr. Lee's television address was

In a separate statement issued in Tokyo, Boeing said it had not seen the final report but agreed with an earlier similar draft report that the accident had been caused by the incorrect repairs, which remain undetected during scheduled inspections.

Boeing said it had made tests and provided equipment for aircraft to insure that a similar accident could not happen again. Transport Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said: "Repair instructions themselves were appropriate. If the repair work had been done faithfully to the instructions, the accident would not have occurred.'

The president of Japan Air Lines, Susumu Yamaji, said that JAL was now conducting checks when it received repaired aircraft.

The plane, JAL Flight 123, hit Mount Osutaka, north of Tokyo, on Aug. 12, 1985, after a bulkhead separating the pressurized cabin from the unpressurized tail burst, fracturing key control systems. Only four persons survived

The report unequivocally cleared the JAL crew of all responsibility. A panel member, Osamu Fujiwara, said that the captain and his crew, all suffering from lack of oxygen, had done their best to regain control of the aircraft.

"There could have been nothing in their training to prepare them for that situation," he said.

The report said the impact would have killed everyone in the front of the plane instantly but that some further back probably survived for a while before dying of shock and injuries.

In a separate set of recommendations, the investigators said that large aircraft operating in Japan should have fail-safe systems that

JERUSALEM (Reuters) - Isrsel has arrested a Palestinian guerrilla squad in the occupied West Bank that is accused of being responsible for killing the Arab mayor of Nablas and five other murders or attempted murders in the past two years, security sources said Friday.

The group was said to belong to the Syrian-backed, leftist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, which claimed responsibility for the assassination of Mayor Zafir al-Masri in March last year, accusing him of collaborating with Israel.

In an apparently related development, the head of the Israeli Central Command, General Amram Mitznah, ordered the detention without trial of three Palestinian activists from the West Bank: the Israel state radio reported. Two were described as popular front activists from the Dhei-sheh refugee camp, south of Bethlehem, and the third as a convicted murderer from the town of Ramallah.

- NASSAU, the Bahamas (NYT) - National elections were being held here Friday, and the main is-sue was corruption related to drug trafficking in this nation of 700 islands.

The issue has reduced support for Prime Minister Lynden O. Pindling, whose Progressive Liberal Party has ruled the Bahamas for 20 years. But Mr. Pindling, a captivat-ing speaker and skillful politician, is revered for having led the Bahamas to black majority rule in 1967 and independence from Britain in 1973 and the election was expected to be close. Nearly 100,000 of the Bahamas' 240,000 residents are registered to vote and a high turnout was expected. Mr. Pindling's party blocked an opposition request for internation-al observation teams and the use of indelible ink on voters' fingers to prevent double voting. Three Americans sent by a U.S. Senate subcommittee on terrorism, narcotics and interna-tional operations are being permitted to watch the elections, but are not being given access to polling places.

U.S. Defers Poles' Immigration Status:

Lynden O. Pindling

WASHINGTON (WP) - Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d has extended for six months the special immigration status of 7,000 to 10,000 Polish nationals who have settled in the United States since Poland declared martial law in late 1981.

Mr. Meese's announcement Thursday reverses a recommendation by the State Department, which is seeking to normalize relations with the Polish government and urged that the special immigration status be revoked June 30, raising the possibility of mass deportations. The extension will continue through the rest of the year and will allow

Norway Revives Probe of Soviet Sales

OSLO (Reuters) --- Norway, embroiled in a dispute with Washington over high-technology military sales to the Soviet Union, may have sold more of the same equipment since the original deal, senior justice officials said Friday.

The state prosecutor, Tor-Aksel Busch, said he had started fresh investigations into Konseberg Vaapenfabrikk, the state-owned arms firm which in 1982 and 1983 delivered computers to Moscow used to help make almost silent submarine propellers. "There may have been other deliveries of the same equipment since then," he said. The police had closed their investigation into the original sale because a five-year statute of limitations.

The development is expected to cause concern in Washington, where there have been calls in Congress for a ban on trading with the company ministry to formulate more explicit and for damages compensation for the deal. GENEVA - The International Labor Organization, overriding reservations of Western governments, voted Friday for mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa that would stop trade, loans, investment and dealings with Pre-toria on the world gold market.

A report condemning apartheid was adopted 331-26 with 26 abstentions. The U.S. delegation voted against the report, saying it would not advance prospects for a democratic multiracial system in South Africa. Britain also voted against the report and several European Community members abstained.

The report called on all governments to sever political, military, cultural, sporting and diplomatie relations with South Africa and it urged trade unions to organize con-sumer boycotts of South African goods.

A Sensible Budget Plan

With a prod from President Reagan, con- there. Furget it. The target is too severe, gressional Democrats have finally agreed to and the president's phony elaim only coma plan for next year's budget. It makes a sensible cut in the lederal deficit. It courageously seeks to establish the principle that increases in military spending be covered by tax increases. Its nne major drawback derives from its very boldness; if Congress and Mr. Reagan cannot agree on taxes, the total deficit reduction will be small.

American travelers to shun Beirut, where civil authority had collapsed and where it was oot safe even to drive to the airport.

The big plus in the resolution now adopted by House and Senate conferees is the linkage of higher military spending and higher taxes. No more feeding the Defense Department by cuts in social programs or by enlarging the national debt.

The big mious is the fragility of the compromise it represents. Republicans took on part in it, and the House and Senate Democrats were deeply divided over priorities. Only after the president needled them on televisinn Monday night did the Democrats finally settle their differences. It is an npen question whether the party's leaders can hold their majorities in line on appropriations and taxes in the face of President Reagan's veto threats - and, probably, some actual vetoes.

The government will run about $180 billion in the red this year. That is a $40 billioo improvement no last year, but far above the ceiling of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget bill. The statute's target for next year is $108 billion, and the president still pretends his budget would get pounds the difficulty of getting anywhere. The budget committees say that their resolution would cut the deficit by $37 billion next year. That is a responsible level given concerns about deeper cuts triggering a recession. Realistically, it is also about what the president's budget would have accomplished. On the spending side, the resolution allots less for defense and more for social programs than Mr. Reagan wants. On revenues, it proposes $19 billion of new taxes that he does not want, and a one-shot infusion of $7 billion by a prepayment of rural electrification borrowings. Assuming both houses adopt the resolution, the next step is effecting legislation, and none is more contentious than the tax bill. Its size is fixed by the resolution - $19 billion the first year and $64 billion over three years. Its contents are yet to be determined; promi-nent possibilities include higher taxes on gasoline, liquor and cigarettes, and higher estate taxes. Regardless, more revenue is essential for credible deficit reduction, and linking it to defense spending is both valid and clever. The plan is to offer the president a choice; $289 billion of new appropriations for defense if he rejects the tax package, and $7 billion more if he approves it.

Mr. Reagan will not find the plan attractive. It is to be hoped that moderate and responsible Republicans in Congress will, -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Turkey's Success Story

years earlier than the Latin American countries did. Now, a decade later, it is emerging as an example of success, Many people in the U.S. Congress think that Latin America is being forced by its enormous debts into a downward spiral from which the only escape is to cancel the debts on a grand scale. But the Turkisb case argues persuasively that, with good internal management, even a country that has borrowed far too much can restore itself to strnng growth and normal access to credit.

In 1977, Turkey ran out of money to service its debts. Its first response was simply

Turkey went into a foreign debt crisis five nearly in half, and the inflation rate dropped sharply. Then, with demand under control, they peeled the restrictions off imports and exports, letting the market set the exchange rate. Exports soared, and by last year the foreign deficit, even after all the payments for debt service, had dropped to one-fourth the 1980 level. Some economists have said Turkey is a special case because its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, in view of its strategic location, were willing to keep lending heavily as it embarked on this transition. It is true that the IMF, the World Bank and several governments put up a lot of money to case the process. But that is also an answer to those senators who oppose further lending to the Latin countries, arguing that it piles up unpayable debts more booelessly than ever. It has not worked out that way in Turkey. While Turkey now owes more than it did in 1977, its economy is stable and growing rapidly. The commercial banks will lend to it without coercinn, as they will not to most nf the Latins. Turkey's government is becoming less undemocratie and heavy-handed. It is still a country under strain. In France, the focus is on new defense concepts hased on some kind of French-German military integration. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany have come out for a joint !command under a French general, and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing would have France declare that its independent suciear deterrent could also be dent nuclear determine to the invoked to protect West Germany. These are far-reaching ideas, im-plying a reversal of historic policies. Even the many proponents refuse to face the full implications and there-fore are not yet taken really seriously. The key question ducked is what that would mean for the Atlantic alliance; it is answered only with vague allu-sions to a need for "coordination."

All West German forces are now committed to NATO. Would a French commander in charge of all or part of them in turn be integrated within the alliance structure, thus ending France's proclaimed supreme autono-my? Impossible, is the unanimous French response. In that case, would Germans under the command be removed from NATO, almost surely de-stroying the alliance? That is definitely not the aim. So the impasse remains. But the reasoning leading up to the final barrier is powerful. Together, with the geographical depth of France and its access to the Atlantic, French and German forces could present a much more impressive conventional strength, reducing but not eliminating reliance on the nuclear deterrent in Europe.

Two fears hannt the French now. One is that German dreams of reunification will lead to neutralism. There has been a good deal of speculative comment here that Mikhail Gorbachev might attempt to seduce the Germans with such an offer. It appears outlandish. High officials in Moscow make it clear that the last thing the Russians want to see in Eorope is the re-emergence of a single Germany, which would have great economic and political power even if f pledged to nonalignment. And though he draws all the advantages he can from relations with West Germany. the East German leader, Erich Honecker, or his seccessor, would not easily accede to disappearance of the romp state they have built. Forther, what would Poland do? Still, the French are obsessed with the thought. Full military ties with West Germany would insure against the possibility. The second French fear, ironic though it may sound from a country that expelled American troops, is that the Unned States will withdraw much of its forces from Europe and "decouple," substantially diminishing its guarantees for Western Europe's defense. Despite mounting budget constraints and occasional U.S. suggestions that this would startle the Europeans into doing more for them-selves, it is also unlikely. The basics of the alliance remain unchanged and need not be affected by nuclear, and it must be hoped Litmus Test: Was Rust a Conspirator or a Romantic?

PARIS — It is all but impossible to persuade the European man on the street that there was not "something" behind Mathias Rust's flight across Soviet territory to Red Square. A casual poll pub-Sovial terniory to ket square A casua poil pub-lished in a French magazine sees most people con-vinced that the flight was inspired by the Russians themselves, perhaps by a faction around Mikhail Gorbachev, to discredit rivals — or conceivably by the CIA. But there is little doubt, to quote one person, that "there was a hidden hand" behind it.

A friend once observed that one reason Italians believe in conspiracies is that there are a lot of conspiracies in Italy. Who in the Anglo-American world, a few years ago, would have credited a rumor of the existence of a vastly powerful secret Masonic lodge influencing Italy's intelligence ser-vices, army, banks and industrial companies, planning to scize the government itself - and strong enough to have a serious chance of doing so? We would have said that was Fu Manchu stuff. But the existence of the P-2 lodge is now history.

France has repeatedly experienced conspiracies about which the most outrageous rumors circulate, and which never are quite resolved. A prominent (and aristocratic) politician was murdered in the 1970s in an affair never yet explained. François Mitterrand himself, when an ambitious young politician, was involved in a curious affair where be claimed to have escaped an assassination attempt that later was revealed to have been a fake. Who was deceived by whom? It has never been settled,

No wonder the French and the Italians cannot really believe that Richard Nixon was brought down by a dumb burglary meant to steal information on his rivals, rather than by a meticulous conspiracy of liberal politicians and press. People in Europe even now find it hard to believe that anyone could be quite so wonderfully simple, and

It is an American strength that we go on with such confidence. It may also be that the pessimism of Europeans — and what I have been describing it a form of pessimism, a submission to uncontrolled forces - is a transient product of the events of the 20th century. From Renaissance to Revolution and Industrial Revolution, Europe possessed supreme confidence in its own and humanity's possibilities. Colonialism, imperialism — these were possible only because of an explosion of confidence, a European conviction of mastery. Europe today is the product of two world wars, inflation and revolution, totalitarianism - and genocide. People only now are emerging from this, still shocked, insure of themselves, unconfident-about their civilization, encertain that all of that is over. During the last 70 years they have been given good reason for pessimism. But if their present pessimism is the result of these recent events, then it is the product of change, and will itself change. to devalue its currency to improve its competitiveness. But devaluation alone accomplished little, a point that uneasy Americans are beginning in suspect may also apply in the United States. After several years of floundering and a military coup, Turkey set itself on a course of rigorous economie reform. The New Securities Cop

When the U.S. stock markets go through a long unbroken rise, experience warns, loose practices proliferate in the flow of quick money. As the policeman on that beat, the Securities and Exchange Commission has the arduous job of enforcing the safety rules. David Ruder, the Northwestern University law professor now nominated to be the next rman of the SEC, is about to step into an ch: office that is likely to become increasingly demanding wherever the market goes. Enforcing the safety rules will be only half the job, for some of those rules are hadly out. of date and need to be rewritten. Congress is already at work revising the definition of insider trading, and legislation nn corporate takeovers is likely. The next chairman of the SEC is going to spend many days, and some nights, working with congressional commit-tees as they rewrite the securities laws.

Financial ingenuity in recent years has developed many new instruments, and new markets, that have never been tested by a severe downturn in prices. The present financial boom has been running for nearly five years. In that time the Dow Jones average of industrial stock prices has tripled. Money generated by this surge is going into a great variety of esoteric securities and trading strategies that have never been through even a mild slump. It is not simple to protect the public while the market is going up, as the ivan Boesky case suggests. It is even more difficult, and no less essential, to think ahead to the downturn that lies somewhere ahead What protections will be needed then?

Mr. Ruder, who brings a fine reputation to this office, says he will continue to enfarce the laws against insider trading with the same vigor as the ontgoing chairman, John Shad, and his staff at the SEC have devoted in it. But Congress will want to know his views on a wide range of questions about financial deregulation. The case for deregulation is efficiency; the case against it is stability. Congress and the SEC try to balance the two, and the ideal balancing point shifts with time and circumstance. There has been a lot of deregulation, much of it useful, over the past decade. But currently, with stock prices and speculative fever high, it is time for regulators to lean back in the direction of stability.

firm national security policy. In the principal countries of Western Europe with electorates most similar to America's -- West Germa-ny, France and Britain -- centerright parties have won convincing victories throughout the 1980s.

In 1982 and again earlier this year, Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Party wiped out the bberal Social Democratic Party, which had dominated West German politics for years. In France, the Socialist Party was repudiated last year by voters in favor of the conservative neo-Gaullists.

And, of course, in the United States, the Democratic Party has lost both presidential elections in this decade. Liberal or left-of-center parties generally were defeated because they were perceived to have lost control of inflation and mismanaged the welfare state (France) or because they were perceived as weak on nations issues (West Germany) or for both reasons (United States and Britain). Voters in these democracies did not elect right-of-center leaders to repeal the welfare state or to promote a confrontational foreign policy. In all four countries, conservative parties have been unable to sharply reduce social benefits. The Reagan administration has left the building blocks of the New Deal and Great Society in place because of their broad public support. But national resources have been limited by declining rates of real growth, and voters have watched their personal incomes eroded by inflation. Those voters want what liberal parties have failed to supply: economic growth with moders te inflation and a more efficient welfare state In France, for example, President François Mitterrand stimulated the economy in 1981 in order m reduce high unemployment (much as the Carter administration did in 1977 and 1978), and thereby set in motion. an inflationary spiral that led to his Socialist Party's downfall. The British Labor Party this year promised a major public-works bill to reduce double-digit unemployment, an expansion of the National Health Care Service, and an increase in oldage pensions, to be paid for with higher taxes - and was repudiated by middle-class voters. Likewise, as the national security

A government spokesman said Friday that West Germany saw no connection between the case of a suspected Arab hijacker being held in Frankfurt and the kidnapping of Mr. Glass, United Press International reported from Bonn.

"We have no knowledge of any connection and we appeal to you against speculation," the spokesman, Friedhelm Ost, said when asked whether the latest kidnappings could be linked to the case of Mohammed Ali Hamadah ammed Ali Hamadeh.

Zoos May Disappear From Italian Cities

Zoos are closing in northern Italy, and this week's election of Greens party deputies to the Italian parliament may well make the entire country's zoos an endangered species.

The offensive against the zoos started two years ago when Gian Luigi Melega, a journalist and deputy for the Radical Party, submitted a bill calling for the removal of zoos in cities larger than 300,000. He said Italy's 60 major zoos kept animals in cramped, filthy cages and the keepers often were unqualified. The lawmakers have not debated the bill so far, but 13 Greens deputies are expected to briog it up, Turin was first to close its zoo.

and Milan and Verona are following. Brescia will hold a referendum and so will Rome, with the country's biggest zoo, housing 1.500 animals on 25 acres (17 hectares).

Before the Turin 200 closed at the end of March most of its animals had been sold to animal parks in Italy or 10 zoos elsewbere in Europe or the Middle East. However, several animals including Romeo, an 18-year-old giraffe, are still awaiting buyers.

Poach British Nurses

Representatives of 15 U.S. hospitals arrived in London this week to recruit as many as 1.000 British nurses, who are in short supply in both countries. The American arrival was heralded by a media blitz leading up to a three-day Nursing Jobs Fair that opened in London Thursday.

With the prospects of higher pay, hundreds of British nurses were expected to attend the fair. Richard Devito, the fair's American coordinator, said the lowest starting salary for a nurse in the United States is $22,000 (£13.415), and a nurse in a management position can earn be-tween $35,000 and $45,000. DAEDALUS: The Dream Lives, on Fragile Wings

A two-and-a-balf-hour humanpowered flight, he said, is "a lot more difficult" than a two-and-ahalf-hour triathlon." "You can't ever back off and get your wind again," he said. "The plane needs a minimum amount of power just to fly. As soon as you back off, you start losing altitude." The roots of the modern Daeda-ius project can be traced to 1979, when an MIT team built an easypedaling, 10-mile-an-hour aircraft named Chrysalis to fly across the English Channel. At stake was a prize of £50,000 put up by Henry Kremer, a British industrialist, for the first cross-channel flight under human power. Bot only seven days after the first airborne test of Chrysalis, the Gossamer Albatross made its historic flight.

The MIT team went on to build a smaller aircraft called Monarch, which in 1984 set a world speed record for buman powered flight by negotiating a diamond-shaped 1,500-meter (1636-yard) course at 21 miles an hour. The manager of the Daedalus project, John S. Langford 3d, is a former aeronautical engineer with Lockheed Corp. Finally, they strapped him in a stationary cycle "ergometer" in the basement and had him pedal for four hours at power settings 10 percent higher than they thought the flight would ever need.

While a lot of athletes could pump for more power than Mr. Tremmi could, he produced more power per unit of body weight --which is much more important in a plane than on a bicycle," Mr. Tremmi said.

umpb in the media. But the triumpb came within inches of turning into a disaster on the scale of the Fee collection sale held in New York in 1985 when over two thirds of the goods were bought in Basically, Christie's had three fantastie pieces from private sources around which it built a 73lot sale.

The centerpiece was an extraordinary bureau of the early 18th century from Knole Park in Kent. Scenes in the chinoiserie taste show orientals ambling about in garden settings. The combination of mother of pearl, and green, red and bluestained shell inlay on a yellow brass ground is overwhelmingly Baroque. Floral garlands running along the edges increase the seething effect. It could not be further removed from the French decorative art to which Christie's originally ascribed it, nor come nearer to German Baroque around 1700-1720 with its penchant for vivid polychromy.

On closer inspection, it appears to be inspired not by Chinese art but by Moghul India, of which it displays the composition, the use of color, and the typical handling of trees and birds. The Indian infinence, which has gone unnoticed so far, would not be surprising in sontbern Germanic lands. In Schloss Ambras, in Austria, one room had its walls covered with album leaves from Indian sources. That alone is enough to make the bureau one of the great sensations to come up at auction in the last quarter of a century.

The second sensation in the sale, if less unexpected in art history terms, was a Louis XVI commode not three times the price. The first reason for its failure to do so lies in the besitant labeling, oscillating between France, Germany and Italy. A second factor may have been the hasty restoration work in some areas. And a third one is perhaps to be sought in the often unflattering context of the sale. The fillers varied erratically in quality. Some of the better ones included pieces formerly in the collection of Antony Tannouri seen at auction at Drouot in Paris on Nov. 15, 1983. A London weekly scoffed at Christie's for taking in pieces that had been so recently sold and and for being ungentlemanly for selling items consigned for sale as a result of a Paris court decision. That criticism is hardly relevant since trade sources say that these did not sell but went back into the bands of the creditor. Processing goods is speedier still in Impresionist and Modern Master paintings. No auction bouse can afford to reject good to high quality pieces, which most of these were.

Sure enough, most did very well. A Louis XVI parquetry commode a encoignures doubled its Drouot bid as it rose to £126,500. Several lots from the Louis XIV period sold extremely well. By contrast, it was regrettable to include a Louis XVI regulator clock and cabinet which, by Christie's own admission, was originally veneered in ebony. It failed to sell at £190,000 as it did in Paris at 2.1 million francs.

Christic's apparently erred on a bigger scale, if the opinion of the top Paris dealers means anything. One of them, admired even by his peers for his sharp eye, says that the pair of Louis XV giltwood stools" bears a regrettable resemblance in 20th century production. This makes the £9,350 price somewhat the high at £121,000 while the Tho-mire fireplace set nearly tripled the about a pair of "Transitional high estimate at £154,000. An Affectionate Tribute to Ravel

By David Stevens nal Herald Tribune

Paris - Maurice Ravel was was himself almost from the beginning, which gives a particular density and unity to the admirable series of concerts at the Theatre Musical de Paris/Châtelet presenting his complete works in com-memoration of the 50th anniversarv of his death. And, although be was not always a miniaturisi, his art was so compact and lacking in rhetoric that this feat is being accomplished in 10 concerts comprising more than 70 works, counting the individual songs. This counts some works twice, in a sense, because several exist in versions for piano (or pianos) as well as orchestra, but with Ravel this is by no means redun-dant. The only notable exclusion is of the composer's transcriptions of the works of others, such as the orchestration of Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition." In some comments on his own attitude toward music, made to his friend Roland-Manuel and publisbed after his death, Ravel stressed his esteem for craft and artistic conscience and his distrust of "sincerity." "My objective is technical perfection. I can strive unceasingly to century remake, remained unsold sources say, the object was recently this end, since I am certain of never being offered at $1.5 million on the being able to achieve it. But emotional reticence is not lack of emotion. Seiji Ozawa's con-cert with the Orchestre National de France was a worthy tribute to a master of orchestral color, but also to the darker feelings that sometimes break through. The violence of the Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, but also its lyricism and wit. can rarely have been better served than in Leon Fleisher's performance, highly charged and of stun-ning virtuosity. (A few days earlier French television showed a fleeting bit of history - some of a film showing Paul Wittgenstein - the one-armed Austrian pianist who commissioned the work - playing t in Paris, Ravel conducting.)

Marilyn Horne lavished sumpuous vocalism on "Sheherazade," and Ozawa wound up the concert in glowing style with an imaginative juxtaposition, "Valses nobles et sentimentales" followed without a break by "La Valse": two homages to the Viennese waltz that stand alone yet enhance each other. an apotheosis of the waltz that ends in a danse macabre, the collapse of an era if not a civilization.

The chamber music concerts were full of gens along with some curiosities — like "Frontispice," a minuscule item for two planos but requiring a fifth hand to perform (shades of Saue). The gems includ-graphs based on them - conveys he mysterious aura of his work. Jean Baudrillard, who wrote the introduction to the show's catalogue, says: "The magical power of the miniature equivalent of things, the opposite of their magnification into sculpture, is well-known. By concentrating them into a small space, which thereby becomes fantastic, one rediscovers their quintessence.

Françoise Sagan says of him: "Mation is a big painter on a bitle planer." His technique of reduction-enlargement seems to control the emotion in his work, reducing them "at least in appearance to what is probably the right moral scale for us in the real world," she wrote this week in Globe magazine.

Matton's prestigious admirers know him as a familiar character in the Parisian world of night people. In the 1970s, he was one of the most successful French illustrators in magazines in Paris and New York, including nude centerfolds that display the eroticism that recurs in his work today. He devoted himself to commercial work after deciding that he was never going to get serious critical attention as a figurative artist. The postwar French art establishment, avid for abstract art and then for Pop Art, dismissed realistic work, even that of Matton, whom Alberto Giacometti regarded as the finest draftsmun of his generation.

Five years ago, Matton moved to the countryside near Paris to devote himself to painting. Looking for a new way to make realism credible, be began experimenting with the tiny environments. The painstaking reconstructions --newspapers the size of matchbook that are readable, buodreds of minthat are resource, buotieus of half lature painttubes, painted wallpa-per covered with tiny graffiti, the outline of each brick, the stuffing of an armchair - are so perfect that they create the illusion of being actual rooms when they are photographed. By manipularing the rooms through camera angles, Mutton can quickly complete a big of being a realistic painting. This process, inexplicably, creates a kind of visual authority, perhaps by filtering out the artist's subjectiv-

ECONOMIC SCENE

Salomon Memories of Walter Heller, Moves on Persuader to Presidents Harcourt

By LEONARD SILK

EW YORK --- Walter W. Heller, who died this past week at the age of 71, raised the role of the president's Council of Economic Advisers to the highest level it has attained since that body was established by the New York Times Service Employment Act of 1946. One reason for Mr. Heller's brilliant performance as chief economic adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson was his use of the English language. He could make economic ideas not just intelligible but arresting and persuasive to presidents, congress-men, business and labor leaders, journalists and everyone else — and without debasing or distorting the ideas he was pushing. He loved metaphor. "The fine mist of incipient inflation may be turning into light rain," he warned early in 1966, about a year after he left Washington to return to teaching at the University of Minnesota, But President Johnson, determined to pursue the war in Vietnam without going to Congress for a tax increase, was slow to heed the warnings of Mr. Heller and his other economic advisers, and the inflationary rain came down. Whether in failure or success, however, Mr. Heller demonstrated that economic rhetoric is the crucial link between economic analysis and policy making. As Donald T. McCloskey has em-phasized in his book, "The Rhetoric of Economics," the mathematical formulations of economists are of little use unless they can be translated into arguments that policy makers and the public can understand and be willing to act upon.

The art of persuasion is a matter not of words alone but of heart and courage and charm. Mr. Heller had these qualities in abundance and used them lavishly inside the White House in dealing with the president and his political aides, most of whom were trained as lawyers. He fired memos at them and followed up with face-to-face lectures. He worked incredibly long hours and got his exercise in Washington by ignoring the elevators and running up and down the stairs at the old State Department building - the Executive Office of the President.

But Mr. Heller also carried his campaigns to the people.

E WAS ALWAYS READY to spend time talking to reporters, being interviewed on television programs and speaking at public meetings. President Kennedy encouraged him to do that - to get out in front of the administration to see whether a new and controversial idea would fly or be shot

As good as Mr. Heller was in communicating economic ideas, his great distinction was that he brought to policy making the best professional economic thinking he could mobilize.

Although he enjoyed being chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and was by no means without vanity, he was secure and modest enough to bring to that body the stars of the economics profession, such as James Tobin (later a Nobel laureatc), Kermit Gordon, Gardner Ackley, Robert Solow and Arthur M. Okun, and he continuously consulted outsiders, such as Paul A. Samuelson, the first American Nobelist in economics.

The economic policies of the Kennedy and Johnson years were essentially built on the theory of John Maynard Keynes that total demand for goods and services could be manipulated to prevent unemployment on one side and to stop inflation on the other.

Did the outbreak of inflation in the latter half of the 1960s represent a failure of those Keynesian policies - or was it due to the unwillingness of President Johnson to heed his economists' advice? The answer is both. At first, the economists of the Kennedy-Johnson era were inclined to blame the political leadership for failing to take their advice in time to head off inflation by reversing fiscal policy to restrain aggregate demand, with the economy approaching full employment.

As time wore on, however, it became clearer that there had See HELLER, Page 13

OTTAWA - The embattled government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney late Thursday un-veiled a sweeping plan to overhaul Canada's tax system, the first such reform in 15 years, with a package that includes a limit on capital gains exemptions and a sharp cut in the dividend tax credit.

The tax revision was seen by observers here as a move that could determine the political fate of the Mulroney government, which has been battered in national polls by a series of scandals and management gaffes. The plan would bring tax relief to wage-earners by next year, but would put off a new sales tax --thought certain to be controversial - until after the next elections.

Uganda, Mozambique Win Relief on Government Debt

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispatche

PARIS — The creditor nations known as the Paris Club have agreed to a major rescheduling of the government-to-government debts of Uganda and Mozambique, the grouping said Friday. At meetings here this past waek, both countries were accorded terms more generous than usually granted by the creditors. Ugands was given 15 years to repay its debts with a six-year grace period while war-torn Mozambique was accorded an exceptionally long 20-year

The Paris Club said it approved of both countries economic programs and wanted to assist their external payments prospects. It said both countries had very heavy debt service obligations and low per capita income. No details were available on the amounts involved, but last week

Uganda's finance minister. Crispus Kiyonga, said he hoped for a rescheduling of $120 million. Uganda's total foreign debt is estimated at $1.5 billion Uganda and Mozambique are the third and fourth countries, after Zaire and Mauritania, to obtain rescheduling of debt since the Paris Club introduced new measures for the less developed nations In London, meanwhile. Nigeria and Barclays Bank PLC said a target date of mid-September had been set for the signing of a package rescheduling Nigeria's medium-term public sector debt and outstand ing letter of credit claims. Barclays is a co-chairman of the commercial bank steering committee for Nigeria. (Rewers, AFP) stroke lead over three of the world's best golfers, including the defend-ing champion, Ray Floyd, in the first round of the 87th U.S. Open.

Under totally overcast skies with to wind and cool temperatures, tenshaw sank a 60-foot birdie putt at No. 11 and a 35-footer for a birdie at the 13th hole on his way to a three-under-par 67 at The Olym-pic Chub's Lake Course. But it was his three-foot patt on the 18th hole for a birdie after an excellent wedge approach that finally gave Cren-shaw his slight edge over Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Tommy Nakajima of Japan and Floyd, who each had 68

"My gosh, the course is diffi-cult," said Crenshaw, 35. "I set my goal on a score of 70 today and now I feel I'm three ahead of the target so that's a bonus for me." After shooting his 68, Balles-teros, 30, said: "I'll take three more rounds of 70. That'll be very close." On a day when many of the world's finest golfers had inconsisent rounds, it was Floyd who layed the most steady golf. Floyd, who at 43 became the oldest winner of a U.S. Open last year, coped well with a 6,700-yard (5,124-meter) course that has no water and only one fairway bunker. While others paid a severe price for landing in rough or greenside bunkers, Floyd hit 16 greens in regulation, an un-of West Germany were in at 69, usually high number, posted two making a total of seven players who birdies and did not have a bogey. managed to finish with sub-par

The biggest surprise of the first round was Jack Nicklaus, who has not been shooting like his old self. Winner of four U.S. Opens and now 47, Nicklaus shot a par 70. He would have been closer had he not three-putted the 18th green for a bogey 5. He was used with nine others, including Boh Tway, winner of last year's PGA Championship.

"Hey, this is something I'm not familiar with," Nicklaus said. Crenshaw, a septimeptalist about golf and one of the game's recognized historians, came close to winning the 1975 Open before a lightning storm hit in the third round at Medinah. Returning to the course after the weather cleared. Crenshaw hit his tee shot at No. 17 into the water and finished tied for third the next day. He has won only one major tournament - the 1984 Masters.

Ballesteros has four major victories --- two British Opens and two Masters. Last Sunday he hlew a playoff against J.C. Snead at the Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic when he gamhled to drive for the green on the short, par-4 first extra hole and missed Snead parred and won.

Fleck, O'Grady: Odd Soul Mates

SAN FRANCISCO. - Jack Fleck, gaunt, gray-haired and wearing a light pink blazer, was virtually unnoticed as he hurried alongside the fairways at The Olympie Club Thursday. But Mac O'Grady knew he was there.

Thirty-two years ago, Fleck, almost as unknown then as he is today, bulled off one of golf's greatest upsets when he caught and beat Ben Hogan here to win the U.S. Open. Fleck is back at Olympic for the 87th Open this week, and the man he wants to watch is O'Grady.

O'Grady appreciates Fleck's attention.

"I've known Jack since 1971and he's been a big inspiration to me," said O'Grady after shooting one-over-par 71, four shots behind the first-round leader, Ben Crenshaw. "Today, he showed up to watch me at the sixth hole and he told me, There's a spirit with you here. Be followed his victory over the great Hogan. "Who is this guy?" everyone said when he won. 'He was a brash young kid then,' Fleck recalled. 'I wanted to throw him out.'

O'Grady is 36, talkative, notorious for his battles with the PGA Tour establishment and his frequent discourses on the spiritual aspects of golf. Almost evcryone knows O'Grady, although, after listening to him, many still say "Who is this guy?" They met when a young O'Grady and Fleck played golf together, became friendly and discovered they had a common vision. "There's a spirit in the game," O'Grady said, "Jack showed up today and told me, 'I shot 76 the first day but I was patient and I won it. So be patient.' It meant a lot to me to have him out there today. I had been waiting for that one magic putt to get me going, and after that, I made it."

As he moved anonymously through the gallery, Fleck noted that the rough was higher in 1955 than this year, and that O'Grady was hitting 7-irons from some places that he had used 3-irons. In a round with five birdies and six bogeys, O'Grady dis-played the patience Fleck had advised, losing his temper

Hard Times for Ripken Sr. and 'the Oriole Way'

By David Falkner New York Times Service BALTIMORE — There are those who will argue that being handed the joh of wine taster hazard to working to the Borgias or troop leader at Little Big Horn are far riskier assignments than managing most big-league ball clubs.

But in a profession plagued hy ahundant mortality to begin with, there is a special hazard to working for a losing team — especially when that team is the Baltimore Orioles, a team with has a long tradition a long tradition of winning and with an owner, Edward Bennett Willliams, who tends to be active, involved and impatient.

"A manager's joh is to win - if he doesn't win, he gets fired," said Cal Ripken Sr., the first-year skipper of the Orioles, who had spent more than 30 years with the organization as a coach, minor-league manager, instructor and scout, before having the team turned over to him after Earl Weaver's retirement and a last-place finish. This year's edition of the Orioles promises little to help managers sleep. The team, as of Friday, had lost 14 of its last 15 games.

It retains bright stars - Eddie Murray and Cal Ripken Jr. - and a cast of hitters that can score in bunches.

The Orioles set a major-league home-run record for the month of May and lead the major leagues with 101 homers, but the pitching staff has an earned average of 4.88, the third highest in the American League. Two key pitchers, Scott McGregor and Mike Flanagan, have won two games between them, and the best reliever, Don Aase, has pitched only eight innings this season and is currently disabled, with no clear indication when he might pitch again.

With the exception of Mike Boddiker, a former 20-game winner, who has apparently returned to form this season, and Dave Schmidt, when he took Lula Lolas to the Coney Island beach in 1946, his motivotion was to get a peek at her legs. He liked what he saw enough to propose motrimony.

POSTCARD Coney Island Snapshots

He proposed atop the Wonder Wheel, Coney Island's towering and wondrous Ferris wheel. In his enthusiasm, he promised to buy her the wheel if she answered yes.

She did say yes. But it turned out the only wheels Vourderis could come up with at the time were the two underneath the pushcart carrying the hot dogs he sold. "A wheel is a wheel." Vourderis recently recalled saying to 1948 after his wed-

Thirty-five years after his wedding day, Vourderis, a Greek immigrant, had followed the American dream through pushcarts and ever larger restaurants back to Conev Island - four miles long, the southern terminus of five subway lines and the only place in the Uoited States that Sigmund Freud said nterested him.

The magnificent Wonder Wheel - the standard backdrop for Vourderis family portraits, according to two of their four children -- was for sale then. Vourderis had scraped together enough to buy it, and Mrs. Vourderis got a late wedding gift

"You can do whatever you want io this country," Vourderis said, pointing to the wheel that by now has carried more than 24 million people round and round through the incaodesceot Coney Island sky.

But even though the sea air still smells of Coppertone and cotton candy. Cooey Island is a faint echo of its former self. The oumber of ides - which, unlike modern parks, are mainly owned by individuals - has fallen to 35, less than half the number a half century ago. The oumber of visitors has dropped to 15 million a year from more than 20 million.

The Vourderis family paid $250,000 for the wheel and an equal amount to repair it.

But that is only the beginning of Vourderis's ambitious plans, in-cluding his desire to hold a wedding on the Wonder Wheel. For the first couple who ask, he will admit 50 guests free and supply "music, food, everything."

> Deferred, even broken dreams are oothing new to Concy Islanders - the people who live there, out those who visit on a nice holiday weekend. In the 1950s, their community fell into steep decline as young people left for the suburbs. As happened elsewhere in the city, the elderly resideots who remained there could not afford to repair their aging homes.

Hopes for casino sambling were unrealized. Most people seem to doubt developers' schemes for a baseball stadium, a new amusement park and hig luxury apart-

"Coney Island has been prom ised a lot of things," said Jim Prince, who has owned a hutcher shop on Mermaid Avenue for the last 40 years. "Things never seem to get off the ground."

Coney Island has long had a powerful hold on the American imagination - and still does if the crowd at the opening of a current Municipal Art Society exhibition, "Cooey Island Comeback," is an indication.

Irving Berlin, Eddie Cantor and Jimmy Durante sang in Coney Is-land. Cary Grant walked on stilts. Jack Dempsey fought, Mae West purred and John Philip Sousa led the band. Diamond Jim Brady came to

By Barry James International Herald Tribune PARIS — The chiof rabbi-elect of France realizes he is about to inherit a fractious and, some would say, a fractured community. "Jews tend to he extremely individualistic and independent." said Rabbi Joseph Sitruk, who was elected this week to the post built two synagogues. "Why two," the journalist asked, "when there's only one of you?" "Well," the Jew explained,

"one's the synagogue I go to, and the other one is the one I don't go Sitruk said that something of that attitude exists among the es-timated 700,000 Jews of France - the fourth-largest Jewish com-munity in the world after those in the United States, Israel and the Soviet Union. "I will do everything, with the help of God, to ensure that this community is as united as possible, as close as possible," he said after his election.

That may oot be easy. Sitruk, a 42-year-old, Tunisian-born Sephardi who is curreotly chief rab-bi of Marseille, has a reputation as a fundamentalist. A large part of his future flock, after years of integration into French society. has a reputation for liberalism. But Sitruk made it clear that he is oot prepared for compromise.

"I am a man of dialogue," he said, "and I am ready to talk to anyone who wants to talk to me." But to those who disagree with his interpretation of Jewish law, he said, "There's one thing I would like to make clear, and that is that I am not about to change the law to suit their pleasure. I do not think this would be doing easiest but it's the one I believe to Jewish. He said there would be no relaxation of the strict rules on marriages between Jews and gen-tiles enforced by the rabbinical tribunal in Paris under the outgoing chief tahhi, René-Samuel Sirat. He was the first Sephardi to kann, acting as witness, be elected to the post, in 1980.

In 1985, Sirat widened the rift Sirat was unwilling to undertake between modern-minded and traditionalist Jews - and more particularly between liberal Ashkenazim and Orthodox Sephardim - by opposing the marriage of Eric de Rothschild, a member of the banking family, to a Roman Catholic Italian countess, Maria-

Béatrice Corraciolo. Sirat refused to authorize the conversion of the countess, which was occessary both for a religious wedding and for the children of sons," he said. the marriage to be considered

Eventually, her conversion was carried out by the chief rabbi of Morocco. This enabled her to be married by Sirat's liberal Ashkenazi predecessor, Jacoh Kaplan, a second seven-year term as a result of the controversy. But he supported the candidacy of Sitruk, who ran effectively unopposed in the election by the 200member Central Consistory. Sitruk made it clear that he, too, would oppose religious con-version for the sake of marriage. "It must he that people who want to convert, and whom we accept, do so for perfectly motivated rea-"It is with an infinite sadness that I see a Jew leaving the faith, but it I would be even sadder to see Judaism compromise its prinwho does not know how to be demanding on himself complete-ly lacks credibility." ciples, I think, of two evils, you have to choose the lesser.'

Sitruk said it would bring Judaism no advantage to make changes merely to bring it into line with existing social customs. "Take the example of adultery," he said. "Under French legislation it was a felony 100 years, then it became a crime, then a misdemeanor until today it's something that is hardly mentioned in court. It is precisely the opposite in Judaism. It is not the laws that must adapt to the customs, but the customs that must adapt to the laws."

Sephardim outnumber Ashkenazim in France as a result of a large influx from North Africa in the 1950s and early 1960s. Of the Sephardim, those coming from Tunisia like Sitruk are considcred the most fundamentalist.

Sitruk gained a reputation as a good administrator and public speaker in Marseille, where he has been chief rabbi for the last 12 years. The Tribune Juive -the Jewish Tribune -- described him as "one of the rare rabbis in France who has managed to fill synagogues." -

Sitruk, one of the youngest men to be elected chief rabbi, inherits a post created by Napoleon in 1808 that gave the Jews an official status analogous to that of the Protestants.

Like many other fundamentalist Jews. Sitruk does not count himself as a Zionist. "If the moral and ethical position which I represent demands that I make a criticism" of Israel, "then I will make it."

Sitruk, the father of eight children, said he hopes to make Judaism in France. "more smiling, more friendly, more human," and open to dialogue with Christians and Moslems. He promised to use his position to speak out against racism and the rise of the farright National Front, which he said threatens to sully France's "vocation" as a home for liberty and the free exchange of ideas. "Personally," he added, "I do not see myself as being the rabbi of any particular group. I think a rabbi must be a rabbi for all Jews, even those who do not accept his ideas. On the question of orthodoxy, I would say that a rahbi
